

Natalie Schilling
Chief Human Resources Officer

Natalie Schilling is the Chief Human Resources Officer for Aerojet Rocketdyne. In this role, she works closely with Business Unit and Center of Excellence leaders, overseeing organizational and cultural development; talent acquisition, training and development; workforce and succession planning; leadership development; performance management; employee communications; human resources information systems; and benefits and wellness.

Ms. Schilling has more than 30 years of global human resources experience and leadership spanning multiple industries. She previously served as vice president of Human Resources for Arconic's (formerly Alcoa) Corporate Resource Units. She also served as the global director of Compensation and Benefits, where she led Alcoa's executive compensation, global compensation and benefits center of expertise, and provided support for mergers, acquisitions and divestitures.

Prior to joining Alcoa, Ms. Schilling held human resources management roles at the former Unocal Corporation (Chevron) and Discovery Communications, where she gained extensive human resources experience.

In addition to her management responsibilities, Ms. Schilling is a current member of the Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM).

She previously served as a member of the Rutgers Advisory Board for the Center for Human Resources and was on the advisory board for the Michigan State University School of Human Resources and Labor Relations.

Ms. Schilling attended the University of California, Santa Barbara, and the University of Phoenix, graduating with a Bachelor of Business Management. She obtained an executive master's degree in Human Resource Leadership from Rutgers University.